Fosterline Wales Factsheet
LGBT foster carers

Introduction
‘LGBT’ encompasses far more than just the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender identities suggested by LGBT, and includes a wide range of sexual and gender identities. More information is at stonewall.org.uk.

Diversity of gender and sexuality should be an accepted part of everyday life and in many ways it is best to avoid giving them too much prominence within fostering. However, unfortunately there are still myths, prejudice and discrimination in Wales, and this can impact on LGBT foster carers’ work. This means a factsheet is needed to help protect against discrimination, make people aware of their rights and suggest resources for anyone involved in foster care who wants more information, support or advice about LGBT foster carers.

Diversity - can I foster?
It is hugely important that there is a wide range of foster carers available with different skills, knowledge and life experiences. Some people still believe that myth that LGBT individuals or couples cannot foster. There have been changes to the law allowing both foster and adoptive carers in an LGBT couple to appear as legal guardians on adoption and fostering paperwork. This change resulted in an increase of LGBT foster carers. All fostering agencies are committed to equal treatment of all prospective foster carers and should positively welcome applications. Your sexual orientation is not important when determining your ability to provide a safe and nurturing home to a fostered child.

Many LGBT foster carers have learned resilience in the face of often discriminatory social attitudes. This can make them good role models when looked after children experience discrimination and question their identity.

Your rights:
You have a right to protection from discrimination and harassment under the Equality Act 2010. This means:
• The local authority must assess, train, support and place children with you fairly, using the same criteria as for non-LGBT applicants and foster carers.
• The local authority must make sure that other professionals, families of fostered children, and fostered children themselves, do not discriminate against you or harass you because of your gender or sexual orientation.

Placement matching
Placement matching is covered by The Care Planning, Placement and Case Review (Wales) Regulations 2015. Sexuality is not a relevant factor for placement matching, but gender is. There may be some circumstances where it is more appropriate for a child to be placed with just men or just women, and other circumstances where a mixed gender couple is more appropriate.

When drawing up a placement plan, the child’s views, wishes and feelings should be taken into account. It may be appropriate to discuss the possible foster carer’s sexuality as part of this.

Tips from other LGBT foster carers
• Don’t be surprised if you encounter a certain amount of prejudice or discrimination. The fostering world is drawn from across Welsh society, so reflects the spectrum of attitudes and behaviour – some of which are negative and discriminatory towards LGBT people. This does not mean you should accept or ignore it. Your fostering agency has a duty to protect you from discrimination, and they can only do this if they are aware of any issues you are facing.
• Be confident. The New Family Social’s 2011 survey showed 76 per cent of social workers thought LGBT foster carers’ openness to difference was a significant strength.
• Any childhood experiences of feeling different, not belonging or being rejected because of part of your identity can help you empathise with looked after children, and make it easier for them to believe you when you encourage them to be confident and resilient.
• Some local authorities and agencies are actively seeking to recruit LGBT foster carers, but some have less positive attitudes. Look around for the right local authority or agency for you.
• Training programmes and literature can make assumptions about the sexuality or gender identity of foster carers. It is helpful for everyone if you make the organisation aware of this whenever you encounter it.
• Other children may ask the child you foster questions that the child may find difficult to answer, may speak negatively about LGBT parents, or use homophobic language. You can help the child you foster by making sure they have appropriate ways to respond.
• Be willing to answer questions and discuss any concerns about the placement expressed by the child’s family. Many questions and concerns can be resolved with good communication. This does not mean you should put up with inappropriate questions or discriminatory attitudes.
